MANILA IN 1861.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

We have on several occasions in this journal, of late years, adverted to those subjects of general interest which have transpired in this interesting portion of the East Indies. The growing trade which is being carried on between the people of the Australian and those of the Philippine Islands, and our improved social condition emanating therefrom, demand from our hands, as public journalists, in a political and social light, a clear and concise view of the manners, habits, and customs of a people who supply us to a great extent with one of the greatest luxuries which, happily, we are the lot of all the Australians. We refer to the article of sugar. And in reference to the Government of the Philippine Islands, if in these articles we appear to have dealt with it at some length, and perhaps somewhat freely, it is not because we claim any right to interfere in these matters. So long as the Spanish Indian Government treat us in that liberal and friendly spirit, which the improved and peaceful notions of the age justly as in expecting—so long we will not interfere, nor turn thereof; and in regard to the internal administration of her Indian colonies, further than is generally accorded to the public press, we offer no dogmatic opinions, preferring that our readers should form their own conclusions.

But the subject of newspaper criticism on foreign governments has long since been settled, as well by popular opinion, which regards all mankind as one family, as by the leading journal of the world, the Times, which has a correspondent in almost every civilised court and city; and why should not your highly respectable and ably conducted journal, the leading paper of the southern hemisphere, faithfully record the virtues and frailties of the governments and people within the sphere of her influence? Had Spain in her Indian possessions a free press,—but we but even hinting anything that boon—things would have been in a far more satisfactory state for government and people than they are at present.

The Spanish Philippine Islands, or the Indian possessions of Spain, are comprised within the 10th and 18th degrees of north latitude, and range from 115 to 125 degrees east longitude; the principal islands are Luconia or Luzon, Mindanao, Panay, Negros, Zebu, and Mashate, upon each of which the Spaniards have settlements. The principal city or capital of the islands is Manila, on the first of these islands, and geographers have fixed its position in lat. 14° 30' north, and long. 121° 2' east. It was taken by the English, as we were almost the whole of Spain's colonial possessions, in the war of the last century, when Spain united her fortunes to those of France, and opposed somewhat unsuccessfully the "God of Battles." Manila, which contains about 100,000 inhabitants, is built in the centre of a large bay of a horseshoe shape, in diameter about fifty or sixty miles, and the whole of the bay, save the part opening to the sea, is surrounded with hills of considerable extent, varying in breadth from five to twenty miles; gently undulating hills are seen in the rear thereof, while far looming in the distance we discover one of nature's rampparts, an immense chain of hills, separating the civilized portion of the community from the wild lawless people of the interior. The whole of this extensive bay is protected by military outposts of some four or five miles apart, established chiefly with the view of guarding against the predatory attacks of the pirates of Malaya, who are always at deadly enmity with the Spanish Indian Government. The entrance to the bay is through two narrow channels, of some two or three miles in breadth, formed by an island called Corregidor in the very mouth of the bay. Upon this island the Spanish have established fortifications, a telegraph, and a depôt of the Customs department. On the south-east side of the bay, about 20 miles from Manila, is Cavite, a very pretty little town, which contains the arsenal, and may be said to be purely a military place. Other and smaller towns and villages surround the famous bay, rendering the whole of the scenery a charming prospect, as seen from the shipping. The anchorage for large ships is good, but in an open road-stead, wholly unprotected and very dangerous in the south west monsoon, but small vessels are enabled to go into the river which bisects the city, and they thus ride in safety.

With this general reference to the Philippine Islands, and their capital, we would commence a more detailed description of their political and social state. Manila is a Catholic country, having no popular institutions and is governed by a Captain-General and his council, appointed by the Home Government. Society in Spanish Philippine Islands is made up of several classes, the most aristocratic of which are the higher grade of officers in the Spanish Indian Army, the leading members of the civil service, at the head of which are an archbishop and bishop, and the first class civil servants here of the Spanish crown. Then follow the native trades-people (there are but few pure Spaniards here in trade); they are the upper grade of Indians, and finally come the great mass of all kinds, whom it would be almost impossible to classify; they comprise all kinds of callings, as well as thousands of no calling at all, from the hardworking mechanic, down to the lazy Rank-man. There are few places in the East, or indeed in any part of the world, where it is professed that the law of colour has less influence than in these islands, but there are also but few countries wherein it is more felt or seen. We have not the open, boisterous, impudent, ungracious, and unpopular slights, as exhibited by our American friends towards men of colour. There is not here this offensive and defensive method of exhibiting the differences of colour, but still there is a marked line drawn between the Spaniards and the Spanish Indians, albeit that the difference is sometimes physically speaking difficult to be distinguished; a sun-burnt Spaniard and a fine specimen of the Spanish Indian, with no Spanish blood in his veins, barring the shape of the head and hoof, are little unlike.

The Spaniards hold all the responsible offices under the Government. The natives therefore partake but little of the responsible situations, if we except the ecclesiastical department. Civil and military situations of any note are held by the pure Spaniards themselves, while the subordinate or drudging departments, fall to the lot of the Spanish Indians, with a rare admixture of inferior Spaniards. It is in the ecclesiastical department of the state where, that the natives are strong, nearly the whole of the priesthood being Spanish Indians; still here the superior offices are possessed by true Spaniards, who have been educated at Rome; they direct this important and all potent state engine. The civil government nominally rules, but it is the church that governs; there is no part of the Spanish crown's settlements wherein this is more apparent than in the Philippine islands, as will presently be seen. We have not alluded to the Chinese because they are a totally distinct race, and may be said to hold no political position at all here, although they are numerous, powerful, and wealthy; but in regard to the government of the country they have no part; their duty is to pay the state taxes, or in other words, to supply the oil in order that the state machinery may work easily. The Celestials here settled have never aspired to a participation in the government, contented with the proportion of the crown revenues are paid by them.

It has been stated that the line of distinction is very apparent between the pure Spaniards and the Spanish Indian population; not only is it so at all public entertainments, but it is also in private life. The Spaniard of the first-class seldom visits the Spanish Indian, be the latter ever so wealthy, save on mere business;—the Spanish Indian would consider a visit from the former as a piece of great condescension, and his house is always open for the reception of the first class of Spaniards. Men who are enjoying himself with his friends in a homely ball or card party, the passing Spaniard walks in unceremoniously, takes his tea or cigar or even his dances, sans invitation, and the host considers it an honour. This is the usage in general throughout Spanish India; it is the strongest silent confession of superiority which men of colour acknowledge, because while they permit this liberty they are very careful not to seek a return of the compliment. Again the Indian community are the servants of the Spaniards, but be the former ever so wealthy the true Spaniard never becomes a servant to the Indian—but it is in the public places of amusement that this line of distinction is most evident, there is a marked cut the eye, there is an honour to themselves, to their religion, and to their country; while the character of others is diametrically opposed thereto. In one case the Spanish Indian priest may be the village physician (as many of them understand a little of the healing art), the adviser and the spiritual father, the friend to the distressed, a pattern of what a priest ought to be, but it is feared that a large proportion of these men dishonour their calling, yield themselves up to the sinful lusts of the flesh, "set the laws of their order at defiance, and would become the objects of public contempt and ridicule, were not the poor simple credulous Indian a full and faithful believer in the immunity of his spiritual protector. If it were possible to define the good and bad in outward appearance only the church would have lists to weed, but the tares and the wheat grow up together, and no spiritual hand separates one from the other. This laxity of ecclesiastical discipline is becoming daily apparent in the disregard which the priesthood pay to the rules of the church, in their attachment to, and over indulgence in, the creature comforts, in their yielding themselves up to all manner of gambling—in the frequent instances of their being the fathers of the priesthood; and, lastly, in their utter contempt for those rules in their church which enjoin abstinence from carnal indulgences. The open and undisguised manner in which the priest carries on his love affairs is extraordinary. Some of those, mesopelice, if we may be pardoned the word, as many as ten or a dozen women,—some are more moderate, perhaps, because their pecuniary means are more limited, while the conduct of a large proportion of them justify our conclusion that morality and religion are only assumed passports enabling them covertly to carry on those practices; against which they fulminate from the pulpit. What can be said in justification of men who openly set the ordinary laws of the world at defiance, as to permit their grown up sons and daughters to reside in their houses, and to be publicly known and acknowledged as their children? How forgiving must that people be who can overlook these frailties in their pastors, and yet the Indians do these things; in fact, the priests do as they like, and the flock do as the priests like—but while the latter is indulgent to himself, he is very exacting in regard to those over which he has dominion. This evil, so general, so subversive of all church discipline, striking at the very root of Christianity in the Romish Church, cannot be without its fruits, for while the Indian is silenced by the frailties of the priesthood in relation to infidelity, it is not so with the intelligent Spaniard, one party of whom regard the conduct of some of their pastors as a scandal to their church, while another, prattling, or rather not prattling, by such bad example, avail themselves of those plenary indulgences prescribed by the church, but secretly practised, and so winked at by the priesthood. To a Protestant people these things can hardly be credited, because they look so entirely into the character of a minister of God, these affairs cannot drink from a fountain so impure; but the Catholic laity dare not question the conduct of men whom they are taught to believe "can do no wrong." In spite of the Civil Government and people, and regardless of the good or bad opinions of either, a large number of the priesthood pursue a life destructive to morality and religion, because they have in their power the whole of the population (save the Chinese, of whom a more anon) from His Excellency the Captain-General to the meanest Unboy-Indian. His Excellency, of course, possesses immense power as delegated to him by the Home Government; but no Captain-General, had he felt inclined, has ever yet dared to question, much less to oppose, the priesthood. The present Governor-General is more likely than any who have preceded him to make this bold attempt, and if he does the chance of success are much against him—the priesthood are too powerful, too deeply rooted. The chance of permanent success must be some successful native soldier, who could cut short the magic thread which binds the army to the church, and such an event, if it be desiderated, may not be far distant, for there are Spaniards in this army, but there is no prospect that the event at hand.

One of the greatest, if not the greatest, evil in Spanish Indian society, is the sin of gambling, which the people have inherited for generations; indeed, ever since the mines of Peru and Chili gave to the Spaniards an almost endless wealth. This failing is not confined to any particular class, but all, high and low, rich and poor, follow it with a spirit and a determination which show how deeply it has taken root in the social family of the. The priest puts his quarter's stipend, the lawyer and the doctor, the merchant and the tradesman, the general and the private, all risk the—"hazard of die." Not are the softer portion of creation here less susceptible—some colleges, old and young, indulge in the all gamble. It matters not what time of the day, or for what, so long as it is for "a consideration." The cards are always ready—dirty, vingt-un, loo, piquet, or the dull game of whist. The senora who has scarcely reached her teens, will quit the gay and fascinating dance for the card table. The dull, lethargic, cheroot-loving, fat dame, who has seen some fifty or sixty summers, will leave coffee and cigars for piquet and écarté. The brightest gem in the female character, without which woman is not respected—yes, even virtue itself, is too often bartered for the means of gambling. Terrible are the effects of this vice in this country; it scatters domestic comfort to the winds, and destroys at one moment the hard earned gains of years. No office of trust is free from the effects of the leprosy. Some two or three months since, one of the highest offices under the government became vacant by the delinquency of the holder, who had gambled away 120,000 dollars of the government money, and scarcely a day passes but cases of less note occur, exhibiting the shocking effects which must cause to any community so steeped in this vice.

It has been stated that this vice is general throughout society here, and if its effects are to be lamented where practiced on a large scale and in high life, they are not less disastrous in humble and low life.

"Sellers of the vulgar cannot escape repentance." The Indian Cooly, even in manacles, and his soldier guard, will positively sit down, side by side, and gamble the last cent.!! But space bids us defer a continuation of these affairs for the present, and we propose to resume the articles in an early number of this journal.

GEOLOGY AND BOTANY OF THE TURON.

Two immediate lines of the river to which these observations are confined, extends from a point called the "Bluffs," some way above the Bathurst road, to the junction of the Turon with Rocks, a distance, following the tortuous course of the stream, not exceeding eight or ten miles; this, however, comprises the Township of Sofala, and the larger and most interesting portion of the present gold field.

The superficial geology of this portion of the Turon is simple and uninteresting, if we except aside the golden treasures of its alluvial deposit, it will but indifferently repay the researches of the mineralogist.

A uniform series of dark whinstone rock precipitously flanks the right bank, in some parts but slightly receding out; in others, presenting imposing mural faces; whilst, on approaching the Wallabys, the character of scenery is modified by the presence of a singularly magnificent. The face of the Lesser Wallaby, a perpendicular wall nearly a hundred feet high, when seen in the sun's rays, reflects toward the observer the most beautiful and diversified colours, this appearance depending upon the decomposition of iron pyrites in the abundant veins of quartz. Within a mile of the Wallaby, on the left bank of the river, may also be seen some fine samples of the effects of denudation, in the fantastic forms assumed by the rocks in this locality. The occasional appearance of schistose rock in some of the dry creeks, traversed by slender veins of quartzite, will sometimes relieve the general monotony, and if the lapidary be a possible quantities of clay iron stones loosely distributed in all directions, the main geognostic features of the district are described.

In further detail it may be remarked, that on the face of one or two of the higher hills immediately bordering the river are found some isolated masses of "silt quartz," of peculiar beauty; this is one of the rare varieties of "hyaline quartz." To a casual observer they appear in appearance a compact limestone; these masses, which in their amorphous form, and glassy homogeneous texture, bear the impress of former fusion under high pressure and rapid cooling, do not appear to be connected with any subjacent rock, and thus offer an interesting problem as to the exact nature of their origin. Similarly located to the above are also found some examples of fine porcelain conglomerate connected together by oxide of iron, in combination with some argillaceous substance. Specimens of the following minerals were also met with:—

Stannine, or tin pyrites, the double sulphuret of the and copper. The existence of an ore of tin must at all times be interesting, as of all metals this has the most confined geographical range, being only known to exist in a few localities, and generally abundant in the spot where it is found; it is needless to remark that the tin of commerce is entirely procured from the alluvial gravel, in the cassiterite, or tinstone; in the present instance the specimens of the sulphuret had evidently been transported from a considerable distance, and, until further mining operations are carried out, they cannot, with any degree of certainty, be forming part of the mineral resources of the Turon.

Proppe, or "the garnet;" of this mineral generally speaking, specimens only received by their finders they are generally considered to be rubies, but the deep and peculiar dark red hue of the Turon specimens, and which is due to chromic acid, cannot easily be mistaken by the practical mineralogist.

Bauxite; a rare clayey mineral, which consists almost wholely of pure oxide of titanium, small acicular crystals embedded in portions of crystalline quartz are found in cradle washings; from the large amount of titanium existing in combination with iron in the subsoil, and improperly called "emery" by the miners, it might be inferred that specimens of rutile would not be uncommon.

Changes in the form and character of the alluvial surface must be progressing, if the evidence of the overwhelming floods which evidently occur in these mountainous regions; traces of the irresistible power of the rolling and grinding current of such inundations are everywhere apparent. At "Four Mile Creek," near the crossing of the Turon, large boulders are well seen; near this point, within a short distance of each other, are two phenomena, the one, a large rock, formed by the sweeping influence of some recent torrent; in either case two sturdy oaks situated displeasingly on each side of the road have resisted crossways, and retained between them the varied ruin which has been borne down from the mountains, consisting of the entire trunks of large gum trees, loose blocks of rock, and every description of vegetable refuse, these being thrown together in a manner most picturesque and imposing. The gum tree bears equal testimony to the great power of these sudden irruptions; again, between Golden Point and the Bathurst Creek, particularly along the line parallel with the inlet which at this part divides the Turon into two branches, the bed of the Turon is in some places the surface of the water is about twelve or fifteen feet; the remains of vegetable drift left in the branches by the receding stream, at the height of ten or twelve feet above the bank level will therefore indicate the passage of a body of water of some twelve or fifteen feet in perpendicular column, the lateral ravages of which can scarcely be calculated. Little doubt have some of the gold which has originally been the river bed, and that at a certain period gold would be here found in so large quantities and with as much certainty as on the open banks of the present water course.

In reference to the botanical features of this district, they are equally remarkable in their general characteristics and in the paucity of genera by which they are distinguished; the Eucalypti, the Casuarina, two or three species only of the Acacia, and the Melaleuca, isolated trees of Sterculia Diversifolia, occupying the sterile summit of those hills most abounding in Trap, those represent the Australian Flora, and in giving a melancholy and cheerless aspect to the general outline; the singular and entire absence of the genus Pinus, the family of Pines, teaches most forcibly strike the most casual observer; of this remarkable family, including the genera Pentacrinites, Protea, Xylomelon, (native pear) Lambertia, Grevillea, and Yelopea, (Warratah) and comprising upwards of a hundred known species, the great majority are found within the limits of the 33 and 34; the line of the Turon being within this parallel, the total absence of every species of this group can only be dependent upon soil and situation; and singular indeed is the sudden transition of geological formations which indicates the distribution of plants between Mount Victoria and the Turon. Upon reaching the summit of Mount Victoria, from the Sydney side, this noble elevation puts a sudden and abrupt close to the sandstone formation, and it is upon the plateau immediately overhanging the range of those strangely precipitous cliffs that Protaceae revel in their greatest luxuriance and beauty; on passing this barrier, and descending toward Hartley, the traveller enters suddenly upon a granitic country, which is equally remarkable in the change thus induced in the character of the vegetation, the Protaceae and Acacia only occurring between this and Bathurst, and the vegetation, abruptly assuming the Alpine form, presents several specimens of much beauty and interest. In regard to the lesser Flora of the Turon, as a mere enumeration of scientific names would convey but little information, it will be said to consist of a few Alpine and small Orchidaceous plants, together with several of the monospermous Epacridæ, of which the Trophalis Insignata is the most prominent; to these may be added three or four species of Correa and Kennedia. An anomaly exists also here in the Genus Pultenæa, of the polyspermous Epacridæ, not a single plant being met with, a sandstone formation apparently almost indispensable to their existence; this, the very beautiful, although common Kennedia Purpurea presents a strong contrast to the last named tribe, inasmuch as it is found in equal vigour and luxuriance, on the sandstone east of the Blue Mountains, on the trap country of the Turon, and in the interstices of granite in the neighbourhood of Hartley; in the latter situation it would seem, if possible, to put on a finer colouring; this may probably be owing to the potash contained in the granite. The subject regarding the localization of plants, and by which these apparent anomalies may be reconciled, constitute the science of the "Geography of Plants" which is becoming daily of increasing interest equally to the geologist as to the botanist; it is certainly difficult to account for the various distribution of the vegetable world; a recent theory, ably advocated by Professor Edward Forbes, presumes that plants were created originally in certain spots, which he denominates "centres of creation," each containing its peculiar group of species, and that they have gradually and gradually diffused over the earth's surface, the extent of such diffusion depending partly on the peculiar adaptation of the plants themselves, and also being in many cases very much modified by geological changes; this at the best is purely theoretical, a collection of facts based upon the separate influence of external agents is more likely to lead to rational conclusions; the indications presented in the above, are the most interesting in which plants grow are of the highest value; thus, a plant growing on a granitic or igneous soil, if found on Trap, it may also be found on trap, limestone, or sandstone; trap may therefore be distinguished from limestone, not merely by its geological resources, but by the disposition of its vegetation; the nature of the soil, whether siliceous, clayey, calcareous, or saline, has also an effect in modifying the vegetation, and the botany of the district thus becomes in many instances descriptive of its geology.

The alluvial soil of several of the flats in the vicinity of Sofala, although wholly unculturated, and apparently barren, would well meet the expectations of those who have interested themselves in the Sheep Station Point, consists of a good sandy loam, rich in the detritus of the surrounding hills, and, if some very advantage to redeem it from sterility.

In closing these rambling and very desultory remarks, an opportunity presents itself of reminding the Australian public of the great advantages which have been conferred upon the colony in a very liberal and generously manner in which Mr. Moore, Director of the Botanical Gardens, is endeavouring, by a voluntary yet arduous course of experiment to benefit the colony, and to his fellow-colonists the principles of this most useful branch of a liberal education; to parties arriving in Sydney with seeds or plants of which appears to exist here in relation to literary or scientific pursuits is sufficiently remarkable; this may not only be attributed to the powerful, commercial, and monetary interests which seem to absorb all classes of the community, but to the apathy or neglect of claims of science and of literature; it is, however, to be hoped that the study of botany at least will be encouraged, particularly on the advance; with the aid of Mr. Moore's well directed exertions, with the exhibitions and labours of the Botanical Society, with the advantages offered in the public admission at all times to the gardens as the place for systematic operations, with the endless fields open for practical observation in a short ramble in the bush, with such means and such appliances it will be strange indeed if the youth of Australia continue longer unversed in the principles of this elegant science; if the labours and writings of a Robert Brown (whose "Prodromus" although written in the dead tongue of botanical literature) longer remain so generally unknown, if the graphic pencil of a Lehmann be unknown, if the name of Lindley be not every youthful botanist is not shortly made conscious of his obligations to the practical researches of a Bentham and a Hooker.

It is to be regretted that the Botanical Society do not publish their transactions, and also their annual corresponding; the transactions of this Society is, with ample resources, and several efficient members of Committee, were a publication of considerable value; the Linnean Society in London, with ample resources, and several efficient members of Committee, were a publication of considerable value; the Linnean Society in London, with ample resources, and mutual advantages would necessarily accrue; any contribution or illustration of a botany of Australia and Polynesia would always be received with avidity by home botanists; the Society, from its interest that is attached to everything relating to the natural history of this remote quarter of the globe, and from the compparative ignorance which still exists of the natural productions of so large a portion of the sub-tropical zone. VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

We have Hobart Town and Launceston papers to the 18th instant.

The first Representative Legislature of Tasmania met on the 20th ultimo, when, after the transaction of some business, Mr. Gregory was elected to the office of Speaker, and Mr. Richard Dry was unanimously elected.

On the following day, his Excellency formally opened the Council, with the following address:—

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, It is with unfeigned pleasure that I address the members of the first Representative Legislature which has met in Van Diemen's Land.

The position in which this colony has been placed was, for a long time, considered to be a bar to the enjoyment of the privileges which have now been conferred upon it.

As I never participated in this opinion, and as I strove to impress upon the Home Government Advisers the propriety of assimilating the system of Government of this colony to that of Hobart Town and Launceston, I feel, on the other hand, several items of expenditure which have been hitherto charged upon the General Government, but which, henceforth, must be paid out of local funds; and the operation, too, of the new system of education will reduce very much the amount which is made on this account out of the General Revenue.

Until, therefore, the Council have come to a decision upon these subjects, the Estimates must be taken as a statement of the extent of the provision which will be required for the efficient performance of the duties of the different departments.

Having thus briefly alluded to the measures which the Government is prepared to lay before you for your consideration, I will, with the leave of the Council to certain questions connected with its constitution and powers, which the very interesting and, I hope, searching enquiry into these as may furnish the necessary data for future legislation.

By the Act of the Imperial Parliament 13 and 14 Victoria, cap. 59, it was competent for the Council to modify its own constitution, to alter and amend the appropriation of certain portions of the Crown Revenue, which the Schedules appended to the Act have mentioned, in short to carry out with regard to this colony such a system of Government as may, after a due deliberation, be considered most calculated to ensure its prosperity. It is hardly necessary for me to point out the importance of such a subject, and the measures, which will be brought before you in the course of the present Session, special reference has been had to this very object.

I regret that unavoidable delays in the return of Writs of Election have obliged me to postpone the meeting of Council to a period when, I am afraid, it may be inconvenient for many members to be absent from home; and I propose on that account to adjourn for a few days the consideration of such measures as are urgently required, and which will, I feel assured, meet with that careful consideration to which their importance entitles them.

The measures which involve the principle of Local control are—

1st. A Bill by which a Municipal form of Government will be established in the City of Hobart Town and in the Town of Launceston.

2nd. A Bill by which power will be given to the Municipal Body in Launceston, to make such arrangements as it may think desirable for the supply of Water to that town.

3rd. A Bill by which general arrangements are made for the construction and maintenance of the Cross and Bye Roads of the colony through the medium of Trustees elected by the people.

4th. A Bill by which adequate provision is made for the maintenance of Roads through out the colony, for the purpose of carrying out such a system of Education as may appear to the inhabitants of the different districts best suited to their wants; the whole control and working of the scheme to be entrusted to bodies locally elected.

These are matters upon which Legislation is urgently required.

There is another subject which, although it will require much careful consideration, will hardly admit of postponement: I mean the Financial system of the colony.

I am happy to be able to report favourably to the Council of the state of the Finances. There has been a regular increase in the receipts of Customs' duties as compared with the corresponding period of last year; and my pleasure is the greater in that I believe this to be the result of a gradual and steady and healthy increase of the permanent improvement in the condition of the Agricultural and Pastoral, as well as of the Commercial interests of the Colony. But, while I rejoice to be able to make so favourable a statement, yet there is much in the system under which the Revenue is raised which requires immediate revision. In the year 1847 I called the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the oppressive character of the Duties levied on certain articles of Import, and to the exemption from duty by Act of Parliament of all articles the produce of Great Britain. I submitted, at the same time, a scheme by which these evils would be remedied. Until the present occasion, however, it has not been in my power to propose to the Council any modification of the existing rates of duty; but, as the Council is now invested with the full power to deal with these questions, I propose to lay before you a Bill by which a great reduction will be made in the rate of duty at present imposed upon imported articles, while, in accordance with the terms of the Act 13 and 14 Victoria, ch. 49, all differential duties will be altogether abolished.

In considering the details of this measure, I have not lost sight of the advantages which this Colony, in common with the rest of the main land, would derive from a freedom of Commercial intercourse as unrestricted as circumstances will permit; and I have entered into correspondence with the Governments of New South Wales and Victoria with a view to the adoption of the principle upon which the free admission of articles the produce of the respective colonies may be best regulated. The correspondence has not yet elapse before this correspondence can be brought to a satisfactory termination, I have not thought it desirable to postpone a measure which affects all classes of the community so materially, but have, in the Bill which will be laid before you, carried out the principle of free intercourse to a great extent; and additional modifications which may be thought advisable can easily be introduced hereafter.

In consequence of the postponement of Custom's duties upon imported articles, I wish to call the special attention of the Council to the provisions of the Act 12 Vict. No. 31, by which a stop was put to the distillation of spirits in the colony. I object on principle to such sumptuary limitation of the right of individuals to employ their capital in any way which may seem to them most advantageous; and I trust, therefore, that the Bill may be enabled to recommend the repeal of the Act in question, — provision being made at the same time to secure the public from fraud, and the revenue from the loss consequent thereon.

I propose also to lay before you a short Bill by which the Government will be empowered to make a deduction from the salaries of all public officers for the purpose of establishing a fund out of which pensions may be paid to all whose offices may be abolished, or who from age or disease may be hereafter rendered incapable of fulfilling the duties of their office—thus enabling an officer to claim as a right that which he is now obliged to supplicate for as a favour. The result of such a measure, coupled with a proper system of classification among the subordinate officers of the Government, would be, I think, a well-to-do words "we regret that we are unable to," in the first paragraph printed above; which would make the address read, "We concur in the opinion." After some discussion, an adjournment was moved by Mr. Gregson, which was negatived; and ultimately the Colonial Treasurer's amendment was lost on division, by a majority of 18 to 8. The Attorney-General then moved the omission of that portion of the address which expressed regret at his Excellency's omission of all mention of the subject of transportation. The Solicitor-General seconded the amendment, which was supported by the Colonial Treasurer, and carried on division by a majority of 14 to 8. The original question of the adoption of the address was then put, and upon a division carried; all the elected members except Mr. A. Morrison, who had left the House, voting for the address, and the nominees against it.

On the 7th, the proceedings were entirely of an initiative character.

On the 8th, Mr. Allison moved for a series of returns relative to the revenue and expenditure in Van Diemen's Land, and the number and the names of the persons who had applied for their services. After some discussion the motion was agreed to.

The drafts of three Bills were transmitted by the Governor to the Council, namely, "To provide for the better and practical form of Municipal Administration in the cities of Hobart Town and Launceston." 2. "To consolidate and amend the Laws for Regulating of our Customs' Duties." And, 3. "To Establish and Maintain Primary and other Schools for the diffusion of useful and unsectarian system of secular education."

On the 9th, Mr. Kermode moved for a series of returns, showing the principle and expenditure on account of the land revenue for the five years ending December, 1851, the quantity of land leased by the Crown during the same period; the Land Regulations now in force; copies of all despatches between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Colonial Minister on the subject of the land fund during the same period; and copies of the correspondence relating to the claim of the British Ministry against the colony for £61,000. The Colonial Secretary said that there would be no objection to furnish the returns moved for. Motion agreed to.

On the 14th, a petition was presented by Mr. Dunn, from the leading bankers, merchants, and traders of Hobart Town, setting forth, "That the recent discoveries of gold in the colonies of New South Wales and Victoria have caused such an extensive emigration from this island that all classes are availing themselves of the opportunities of proceeding thither (persons whom, and of which petitioners complain) many have left indebted to parties in various sums under £20, for the payment of which the existing laws are inoperative."

A Select Committee was appointed to prepare a Bill to meet the evil complained of by the petitioners.

On the same day, His Excellency's financial minute was transmitted to the Council, transmitting the Estimates for 1851, 1852, and Supplementary Estimates for 1851.

Mr. Starling then brought forward a series of resolutions, deprecatory of the further continuance of transportation. The debate occupied upwards of six hours, and the House was addressed by the Attorney-General, Mr. Gladdow, Mr. Joseph Archer, Mr. Wm. Archer, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Kermode, the Colonial Treasurer, Mr. Allison, Mr. Fenton, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Walker, and the Colonial Secretary; and at half-past nine o'clock Mr. Shurland briefly replied. The House was called for, and the resolutions carried by 11 against 8.

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN DIOCESAN ASSEMBLY.

(Abridged from the South Australian Register.)

This Assembly resumed its proceedings on the 5th instant, when the further consideration of the clauses of the report was proceeded with. On the following day this part of the business was concluded, and the various clauses, with amendments, agreed to a committee, consisting of three clergymen and three laymen having been appointed to act with the Bishop, to prepare the report in accordance with the amended clauses.

His Lordship then read a portion of a letter which he had just received from the Bishop of Sydney, under date 6th December, summoning that a meeting of the clergy and laymen of New South Wales would shortly be held, and that some legislation on the general affairs of the Church of England in the Australian colonies was about to be made in the next session of Parliament.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The following clause was then brought under discussion by the Rev. Mr. Watson:—"Your committee recommend the establishment of a fund in aid of salaries to schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, building school-rooms, and to promote education generally, under conditions to be determined by the Diocesan Assembly." Mr. Watson strongly objected to the patronage of a book in connection with the Church of England, being placed in the hands of the Board of Education.

The Bishop said it appeared to him that the Act was altogether unnecessary.

Mr. Watson then brought forward several propositions, and observed that the members of the Legislative Council appeared to have gone out of their way in order to insult every minister of religion in the colony. The question was, would the clergy subscribe to the Board of Education taking out of their hands the control over schools on which from two to three thousand pounds had already been expended.

The Bishop observed, it was most arbitrary and insulting Act.

Mr. Woolcock considered it a direct insult to every minister of religion in the province, many of whom had made considerable personal sacrifices in promoting secular education.

The Bishop observed, that the question of education was not then regularly before the meeting.

The further consideration of the Rev. Mr. Watson's resolutions was postponed until Tuesday, the 13th instant.

THE COLONIAL POOR.

The proceedings at the late Annual General Meeting of the Benevolent Society have recalled our attention to the question, which has several times been discussed in these columns, as to the fairest and most equitable mode of providing for the maintenance of the colonial poor.

Few men are so callous as to deny that the helpless poor must be maintained, or that, as put by the CHIEF JUSTICE in his speech at the Meeting, wherever distress exists, whether it arise from the misconduct of the sufferer, or from circumstances beyond his control, the distress should be relieved. Nor will it be denied by any person who duly reflects on the subject, that the general prosperity of the community, the abundance of employment, and the cheapness of the necessaries of life, are any guarantee against the constant existence of a necessitous class. It has, indeed, been thoughtlessly asked why, in such a country, there should be any poor at all? It might as well be asked why there should be any individuals suffering from the loss of sight, from lameness, from sickness, from old age, and from any of the innumerable calamities by which human beings are every where liable to be plunged into the lowest depths of poverty and want. If even in the land which flowed with milk and honey it was an inexorable law of nature that the poor should "never cease," it would be folly to suppose that in any other land that law would be reversed. Certain it is that in these colonies, with all the advantages they offer to the lower classes, the poor have never ceased; equally certain that cease they never will.

But it is not certain that, as heretofore the poor have not only not ceased, but have increased in numbers from year to year, they will in future become far more numerous than might have been expected under ordinary circumstances? Already our gold-fields have had the effect of adding largely to the number of those multitudes of heartless men to desert the families dependent upon them for daily bread. We are all anticipating a large influx of population that ever would have been realized but for our great discovery. Will not this necessarily produce a corresponding increase in the number of our poor? There can be no doubt about it; and the question is, by what means is the exigency to be met?

It appears that the cost of the Sydney Benevolent Society alone, including the new branch establishment at Liverpool, is estimated for the current year at between £5,000 and £6,000, towards which upwards of £3,000 has been contingently voted by the Legislative Council, the balance having to be raised by voluntary contributions. The vote was carried with the condition that not less than £1,000 should be obtained from private subscriptions.

Now this condition appears to us to be most unjust, and we had almost added, absurd. It is unjust to the benevolent citizens; it is unjust to the poor. It virtually imposes upon the former it doubletax; it virtually threatens the latter that unless the tax be paid, they must, so far as the Legislature is concerned, be abandoned to starvation. The persons from whom this £1,000 is to be asked in the shape of free gift, are amongst those from whom the Colonial Treasury derives the £3000 in the shape of compulsory tax. We put it to the common sense of any man, is this just? Have the representatives of the general body of tax-payers any right—we do not say any legal right, but any moral right—to deal out the public funds on a principle which relieves the churlish at the expense of the generous, and which makes the encouragement or abandonment of the poor contingent on compliance with an inequitable requirement?

In regard to what may be called sectional institutions—institutions in which only sections of the community are interested—the "half and half" mode of voting public money introduced by Sir RICHARD BOURKE is not objectionable, serving as it does not only to assist in the carrying out of laudable undertakings, but to stimulate the pecuniary liberality of the parties benefited by its application. But the cause of the poor is not sectional, but national. It is the cause of the whole community. Incidental distress may have claims which private benevolence cannot and ought not to resist. But the PATRICK SARSFIELD, which contemplates the grant of a pension out of public money, and makes permanent provision for all who may descend into that class, is a burden too heavy for private benevolence to bear, and which, therefore, ought to be borne by society at large.

It comes, then, to this, that if these views are correct—and we are glad to see that they are taken up by intelligent and influential men—the Legislature, instead of doling out its charities with a stinted hand, and on conditions essentially unjust, should open its purse, open itself the entire burden of our pauper system. These half-and-half measures have served their turn; they have met the system in its transition state, caused by the gradual withdrawal of the Government imperial funds; but they are unequal to the great exigencies looming in the future.

The stale objection to poor laws is, that by giving to the lower classes a legal right to be maintained, under infirmity or old age, at the public expense, they encourage idleness and improvidence. If this objection possesses any force, and we do not deny that it possesses some, the fact is, that it applies to our benevolent societies as well as to the poor laws of the parent country. The lower orders here are not slaves, and are sometimes heard to boast, that in the event of distress overtaking them, they have these institutions to fall back upon. The case would not be worse were these institutions maintained entirely at the public cost; it might perhaps be better, if the discipline of our Asylums were assimilated to that of the English workhouse.

Whether our poor should be maintained by means of a specific tax, or by annual votes out of the General Revenue, is a question on which there may be different opinions. We have on former occasions stated why we incline to the latter course. The question ought to have been mooted in the Legislature beforenow. Let us hope that another session will not pass away without an earnest and systematic effort to dispose of it in a way consonant with sound reason, and adapted to the great social changes which impend over the colony.

APPOINTMENT.—His Excellency the Governor-General has appointed Arthur Wilcox Manning, Esq., to be a Magistrate of the Territory and its dependencies, and a Commissioner of Crown Lands for the Monaro district.

WAGGA WAGGA.—It having become necessary to appoint a place at the crossing of the Murrumbidgee River, between North and South Wagga Wagga, His Excellency the Governor-General has, by proclamation in yesterday's Government Gazette, appointed the crossing over the Murrumbidgee River between North and South Wagga Wagga, to be a place at which a ferry shall be established, and at which tolls shall be collected.

FINE ARTS.

MR. NICHOLS'S HAND OF AUSTRALIA.

We have already had occasion to notice the excellent collection of casts and original sculptures which Mr. Nichols, with infinite care, and at great expense, has brought out to this country.

The gallery in Dowling-street is replete with the highest specimens of the glorious antique and the sublime creations of more modern days as there also, bearing silent testimony to the eternal truth, that the love of the beautiful is inherent in the nature of man; and that the spark of Genius, smothered though it be by adverse circumstances,—

"Will, and must ever, shine forth with a brilliance, and pierce through the dense damp cold mists of prejudice or hate; and, in despite of every difficulty, and of every impediment, reveal itself to the world, great and invincible."

A gallery of sculptures is, yet, not the most popular of lounging places, because the unschooled eye wanders idly over the cold marble, not perceiving the qualities, not comprehending the language, of those exquisite embodiments of ideal beauty, which, to the man of education, bring to the connoisseur in those mystical impercentions of abstract excellence, bodily and mental, speak with a voice and tongue which calls forth sweet echoes in the inmost recesses of the soul. Stirring, with gentle, yet with irresistible influence, the hidden emotions of our spiritual nature, and

The art of the printer is more familiarly understood. Colour tells its tale more plainly; the more homely and more easily deciphered characters does it narrate the form and story of that which it would represent; and although there is, even in painting, an almost illusive, while gulf between the truly sublime and the obviously meretricious, yet the representation of natural objects upon canvas, or even by the aid of oil and baked earth, is an easy task in comparison with that more intellectual, because more abstract art of investing lifeless stone with the quality of expression; of making the rude rock, or the rough metal, the channel of communicating to man conviction of the sublime.

George the Second hated "poetry and painting." Whether he loved sculpture or not, history does not; but it is a matter congratulation to us of the 19th century, that the discouragement of art is no characteristic of our age, and that the statuary, so long in the past and nonsense, hath his acknowledged place in the temple of fame.

Mr. Nichols's gallery pretension to the first rank, is evidently an artist of no common merit. In bringing into the notice of the colonies of Australia the immortal works of our forefathers in the race of civilisation, those works which have commanded, and must, to the end of time, command the admiration, or almost idolatrous, admiration of every man who gazes upon them, he has done "yeoman's service" to the state.

But he is not merely the exhibitor of other men's excellencies, he lays claim, modestly enough, to an excellency of his own; and as an artist of high merit, and a proof of his qualifications, he has modelled a colossal head, emblematic of Australia. The work is strictly classical. The head is crowned with a wreath of great beauty: a beauty not ethereal, but earthly—real; the impersonation of the genius of the land, and of its people. The features are "natural and Greek;" the expression of the face severe, thoughtful, serene; the wreath, a smiling chaplet, a virgin simplicity about the contour—a lurking espièglerie in the corner of the full eyelid—which agrees strikingly with the character of the young female,

MISCELLANEOUS EXTRACTS.

THE VALLEY OF THE RHONE.

(From the Special Correspondent of the Morning Chronicle.)

The wines of the Rhone hardly enjoy so great a degree of European reputation as the claret of the Gironde, or the burgundy of the Saone. Yet from what has been accomplished in isolated spots on either bank of the former river, it is probable that a careful system of culture, with judicious crossing of the plant, would elevate the ridges of the Lyonnais, and the high gravelly slopes, between which the rapid flood of the Rhone descends, with vineyards teeming with simple and high-flavoured produce. At present there are but two Rhone wines of any thing like European fame—the sparkling growths of St. Peray, by many considered a finer and more delicately-flavored wine than champagne, and undoubtedly a much more harmless beverage—the other, the generous produce of those Hermitage vineyards which clothe with an unbroken carpet of vines the steep slopes of the hardy hill round the hamlet of the same name, which the Rhone sweeps, contracted for the space into a narrow rock-pent stream, washing the walls of the little town of Tain, right under the vineyards on the one hand, and the feudal towers of the more picturesque and Rhine-like bourg of Tournon on the other. The esteemed growths of both these districts are white wines—St. Peray, a sparkling and vivacious drink; Hermitage, for the most part still and dry, and highly flavored. An effervescing Hermitage is also made, but in comparatively small quantities. In both districts the quantity of the finer vintage wines produced is small compared to the extent of liquor expressed from the grapes, for home or, at all events, French consumption. Red grapes of no particular value grow among the bushes which produce the delicious St. Peray, and immense quantities of red wine are yearly sent from Hermitage to mingle with the Bordeaux wines, and to give the weaker class the body and spirit which fits them for northern sea voyages and for the palates which they encounter upon their arrival. The Tain people maintain that their growths impart to our English clarets their best qualities, and complain that the name of their wines should be totally lost sight of after the mixing. Without going the length of saying that the Garonne is quite so much indebted to the Rhone, there can be no doubt but that the finest of the Bordeaux wines are finely flavoured, genial, and generous wines. I think the vin ordinaire commonly used throughout the north of Europe is supplied of its class I have tasted in France—possessing much more flavour and perfume than you generally find, even in favoured wine districts. In the every-day beverage of breakfast and dinner.

As a general rule the Rhone wines improve in flavour as you quit the stream. The vineyards in the department de Bouches du Rhone produce poor stuff, possessing some spirit, but no flavour. The proportion not consumed at home is sent to the United States, to Brazil, and the old French colonies of the Mauritius, St. Domingo, and Martinique. As we leave the plain behind at Arles, and begin to find rock and hill narrowing towards the river, the range of the Cevennes upon the left hand, and the tumbling mass of the Basses Alps on the right, the quality of the wine improves. The plain, raised from the marshy expanses of the level country, feeds the beloved gravel and rocky slopes sheltering it from the mistral, and spreading out their southerly aspects all day for the benefit of the vines, alternating with the soil and humid vent du sud. The greater portion of Dauphiné thus produces hoards of regular wine, the quality of which might be immensely improved were the growers to think of anything but quantity. The best is—and it is, perhaps, the least of the evils of the sub-division of property system—that it directly tends to determine the general body of French wines, and immensely to diminish the wealth which would otherwise flow regularly into the country. Go where you will, in the Côte, the Burgundy, the Champagne, or the Hermitage districts, and you will always find the produce of a few large proprietors ranking immensely above those of their poorer neighbours. No doubt the real may do something, capital being always ready to purchase the best which offers; but careful and intelligent cultivation—the chary selection of the fruit submitted to the press, in many cases, and scientific experimental courses, and crossing and improving the plants by means of different manures, and so forth, seem to it is reasonable, to think, had no small influence in raising to the rank of famous European beverages, wines separated perhaps by but a dozen feet of shingle from the plants producing a decoction unheard of beyond the huts and cabarets of the locality. But the small proprietor has no means of improving his productions. All his operations are conducted upon an miserable and hand-to-mouth scale, so to speak, as anything like a scientific regularity. He has no intelligence or education to expand upon experiments—he has no capital to enable him to wait for lengthened periods, and so he goes yearly year after year, striving only to extract every possible drop of liquid from seed, skin, and very often stalk; and finishing by producing a beverage which is commonly dear at a couple of sous the bottle. The question is, would it be better for France to have her grape growing districts subdivided into large properties, cultivated by intelligent and enterprising capitalists, employing a race of regular labourers and peasant-labourers, and producing a beverage which, selling at a comparatively good price, would necessarily prevent such hitherto unknown to wine-growing provinces, or that the present system should always continue—petty proprietors furnishing the worst possible beverage at the lowest possible price. There would always be plenty of poor land giving abundance of ordinary wine for every day consumption, while the sons of superior capacities would be improved and caused to render to the country at large the utmost returns of which they are capable. Local wine tables, and statistical works, unite in pointing to scores of localities in the lower valley of the Rhone, where the grape might be cultivated into being a source of wealth for the district. Towards the French Alps, to the east of the Department of the Drome, a site of very great capabilities, and hitherto unknown to fame, is said to be produced. It is a species of sherry, but is only locally known. The best wine towns in the same department, those of Saillons and Die, a sparkling wine, also of capability, is, I am told, produced in pleasant and vivacious drains drinks. Its local name is Clairette. Another good wine, of somewhat extensive country reputation, is Grenache, it is unknown in trade. It is an island commune in several of the less famed Rhone growths is carried on—the wines of Roness, Montalimar, where the mulberry was formerly cultivated, and a vintage of excellent qualities, that of the Domaine district, all in the department of the Drome, being more or less distinguished in the neighbouring large towns—from Lyons to Marseilles, and from Grenoble to Clermont. As a general rule throughout the valley, the hill vines are superior even to those grown upon the elevated gravelly plateaus which frequently stretch backward from either bank of the Rhone. Where broken and powdered granite enters into the composition of the soil, the wines are generous and finely flavoured. A finer earth produces a finer wine. Clay drink soil comes third; and the heavy wet lands produce the worst beverage of all. The first growths of St. Peray and Hermitage always spring from a decomposed granite soil, the stone appearing to exercise a peculiarly genial and forming influence upon the plant. The vines are cultivated with or without supports (called chassalas) on the plains; they very frequently serve for hedges, dividing the fields, or rather patches, of different proprietors. Occasionally I have seen them trellised along dwarf mulberries. Horizontal lattice are seldom used. When the vine slips about above their chassalas, as sometimes happens, they are secured to the top of the near supporting stake, so that the vineyards have frequently the appearance of fields of tiny green arches. Regularly trellised vines are pretty things to look at, but their appearance is always a sign of unintelligent cultivation, and a token of bad wine. In such vineyards the branches of the plant are allowed to grow too luxuriantly, and the fruit has neither enough of air nor of sun. Along the steeper slopes of the hills the vineyards are frequently terraced—hardly an inch of ground being lost—up to the very tops of hills rising at least 1200 feet from the river. In appearance these plantations are almost identical with their Italian brethren; and, indeed, the picturesque little rock-built town of Tournon, with its high perched feudal tower, backed by steep vineyards scrambling as it were, in a flight of long patchy steps, up the shelving mountain ridge behind, forms a perfect fac-simile of a Rhenish picture. A few of the vineyards are ploughed, particularly when times of new plants are to be laid down. The great majority, however, lean upon the hills and the plants are basin-fully cultivated by hand labour—heavy pieks (pioches), being used, of different shapes for different varieties of soil. In rocky ground, the blades of these instruments are twelve-inch tailed, and they are uniformly very short-handled and very heavy. The vineyard labour is extremely severe. The people are incessantly complaining—at least, many labourers did to me, in the Hermitage district in particular—of the constant stooping, which gives them pain in the back and loins; yet the innovation of a longer handle to their picoches is far too daring a thing for their prejudiced minds to entertain. I could hear no intelligible reason for the shortness of the manche of the vineyard tools. The fact is, however, that it is easier in France to change a dynasty or overthrow a religion than to alter the shape of a ploughshare or the construction of the teeth of a harrow.

To return, however, to Rhone wines. St. Peray is a growth of the Ardeche—the vineyards upon the right hand of the river, upon either side of a rifty glen, which here breaks through the high rocky wall skirting the valley, and runs back from the Rhone towards the highlands of the Cevennes. At the bottom of the gorge lies the village of St. Peray—a not over-clean collection of narrow streets and steep and tortuous lanes. The southerly looking slopes, which rise almost immediately behind the houses, and stretch away for up the glen, are the seats of vines from top to bottom. The opposite hill is vine-clad only about half way up; some small patches of vineyard scattered in the most sheltered corners, succeed, and then heath and rock take the place of vine and wheat. On the extreme and corner pinnacle of this hill is perched one of the most singularly elegantly situated feudal ruins in France, the walls of vast thickness, towering from the very edge of a precipice, and so long continuation of a precipice, sinking—with one inconsiderable break—sheer downwards upwards of 600 feet; and the ruins of an ancient company, encircling the blackened and shattered debris of what was once the village dependent upon the fortis clinging round the peak of the rock and the shadow of the crowning tower. The vineyards upon the southerly exposure produce, of course, the base wine, and the portion of them yielding the very best quality is comprised in a waving strip running along the side of the hill, and comprising nearly the upper third of the hill. Above and below this boundary, the quality of the wines falls off. A great portion of the hill, towards its summit, is partitioned off and divided into small freeholds—the proprietors residing for the most part in the village, and manufacturing every year a quantity of wine which never stands in the district. The St. Peray Grand Mousseux is almost exclusively the production of the vineyards of a single grower. M. Fauve, whose chateau stands beneath the most favoured slopes. The vines of the small proprietors would also produce sparkling wine, probably for the most part, of good quality, but the process is very expensive. The Mousseux wine takes a long time to ripen in bottle, so that without capital the business could not be carried on. The vineyards of M. Fauve are partly cultivated by day-labourers, paid from 30 to 40 sous according to the importance of the work and the length of the day, partly managed upon the metayer system, the farmer who takes the management having a right to one-third of the produce—an amount which M. Fauve generally buys back from every year at the market price of the wine, so that even these cultivators are in reality paid a wage varying with the quantity and quality of the harvest. The day labourers are ordinarily employed in the above ground work of the vineyard—changing the echeles and pruning the savments. The operations of the metayers are very closely watched. The great object of the proprietor is, of course, the quality of the wine, that which the metayers cannot be got to lose sight of in the quantity; and the result is that, unless they not strictly watched, they would not crim the vines closely enough, leaving always an eye to the number of branches, and the consequent amount of clusters at grapes. As it is, the shoots upon such plants which have produced the most plentiful harvest are cut from their junction with the stem, leaving the whole returning vigour of the plant to develop itself in young branches, which bear the tendrest and most delicious fruit. The grape is of a fine golden hue, and very sweet, frequently, about the vintage time, bursting from excess of richness. The earth, or rather granite gravel, is carefully turned up and loosened every year round the roots of the plants; the delicacy of the operation consisting in thoroughly stirring the soil without disturbing the branches or possible underground fibres of the shrub. Manure is copiously applied when young slips are planted and for the first few years of their growth. The older plants get on without any artificial nourishment. The compost employed is generally decaying fern and bracken, occasionally with the primary fibres of the fir tree—the latter forming a strong and pungent manure. The lees grows wild upon the hills of the Cevennes, as it does amid the Pyrenees. The process of preparing the sparkling St. Peray wine exactly resembles that of ripening and imparting its sparkling properties to champagne. With the exception, that the former beverage is perfectly pure, the grape giving it all its sweetness, while the latter is very extensively dosed with sugar or sugar candy, dissolved in white or red wine, and technically known as liqueur. The stuff, insoluble in champagne in a sweet sense, is also used to give it colour, the delicate hue of pink champagne being neither more nor less than the effect of the glassful of bright red wine, used as a vehicle for the sugar candy.

The vintage of St. Peray takes place in general at an early period of the season. The grapes are never allowed to ripen on the foot—a peculiarity which attaches itself to most of the sparkling French wines—but at once subjected to the action of the presses, very peculiar instruments, yet capable of a nice adaptation of force. The juice is at once pressed from the vats into the casks without waiting, and is generally the practice, for the fermentation. In the following spring, at the commencement of the warm weather, it is racked off into bottles and then allowed to remain for several years, from three to five, for the liquid to ripen and be fined. This mode of treatment of course involves the necessity of an outlay only tardily repaid. The rippening process is made to take place in the confined bursting of the bottles as the wine passes through its first stages. The loss incurred in this way amounts to about 15 per cent. of the entire quantity bottled, and it usually happens that the better the vintage the greater the breakage. A similar misfortune occurs in the champagne cellars in the spring time. In the latter place it is stated that in one year, and in one establishment, between 100,000 and 120,000 bottles have exploded. This was in a peculiarly warm spring time. In St. Peray the bottles are piled in open racks and lath ledges, so as to allow of the easy withdrawal of the broken glass. The wine having lain the requisite time, the racking process is commenced. All the sediment has been already deposited in the lower side of the bottles, and the process of getting rid of this undesirable beeswing is difficult and tedious. The bottles are secured in a shelving position with holes down which their necks are inclined. The degree of slope is delicately adjusted. At first the bottles are very slightly slanted; then day by day they are jerked more and more out of the horizontal, the dregs by degrees sinking towards the corks, until at length, after months of attention, and nimble manipulation, the bottles become placed vertically, with the whole collection of sediment resting upon the cork. I was astonished to learn that if the bottles had been at once filled in a particular position, the dregs would, nevertheless, still have been deposited upon the sides and bottom; and that even if the sediment had been allowed to settle, and the bottles afterwards at once set vertically, the deposit in the neck and on the cork would be partial and unsatisfactory. During the process, from beginning to end, each individual bottle of the many thousands in store receives several hundred shakes, or separate operations of jerking. Each bottle is taken up, the string which confines the cork out, and the sediment collected at the upward bezel of the effervescing wine, the bottle being filled with fresh liquid, and the bottle without a moment's delay re-corked. The operation is one, for the adroit performer of which is indeed dexterity, amounting almost to sleight-of-hand, is required. The great point aimed at, is the shaping of the cork so as to fit the neck as possible, and as little of the wine, the thumb of the operator being skilfully used to control the escape of the wine, happens that the wine is sufficiently purified by the first deposition. If not, the process is several times repeated, and on each occasion the bottle is stopped with a new cork. The process of champagne making is, I believe almost identical. I had an opportunity of admiring the rapid manipulation of M. Fauve's workmen in the principal depot above St. Peray. The corks appeared double the size of the necks of the flask, but it was evident that this is with great neglect by the help of machinery. The bottle was first placed in a sort of iron press, the cork dipped in water, and then by the tender exercise of a moving vice, which, in answer to two or three twists of the mechanism given by the workmen, appeared to act with as many jerks the lower end of the cork to half its length, at the same time screwing it forcibly down into the bottle in such a manner that the circular wrenches of the metal prevented the fibres of the cork from preventing the slightest future escape of gas through the pores. The bottle was then handed over to another workman, who, with two or three gashes of a knife, pared the cork to the shape of that ordinarily used in champagne bottles, and then, with a twist of the twine, fastened down the impediment with marvellous dexterity. Most of these workmen are engaged by the piece at the rate of about 12 per day. They are of course a different class to the vineyard labourers, their whole work being in-door.

The St. Peray vintage is opened by an edict of the mayor, a principle in order to check the tendency which is said to exist among the cultivators, particularly of Hermitage, to gather in the grapes before they are fully ripe. It is always a matter of fact for a district that the general or provincial reputation of the wines of each year shall stand as high as possible. The small cultivators, however, always looking to quantity, are usually so eager to begin, that it is found advisable to put the whole district under strict regulation, and to have the condition of the grapes examined into by a jury of experts, so that individual vintages being laid upon the shelf—the whole body of cultivators may start fair at the moment prescribed by the official auspicious, not for any one patch of ground, but for the general interest of the whole community. One can hardly think, however, I think, drawing the practical inquiry supposition upon any or all of the grounds on which its existence has been placed, the strange anomalies which hamper personal freedom of action in France are perpetual. For instance, a fire lately broke out almost opposite the windows of my hotel at Lyons, and I was much struck with the apparently instinctive habit of discipline and military order which the people exhibited. A mass of people by as a movement would have fallen in, two long lines of men were formed from the banks of a running stream which traversed the town to the spot occupied by the engines, an endless chain of full and empty buckets flying with marvellous rapidity along the upward and downward lines. Thanks to this speedy water supply, the conflagration was soon got under, and the assistants, who had entered into the spirit of the work, and, for so long as they had the excitement of a blazing house before them, begin to pall in their labour, and to slink silly out of the ranks when the water was only required to slake the heated rains. Retreat was, however, in most cases, more easily attempted than accomplished. The spot selected for the fire was a surgeon de ville, and all the hundred agents of French military police, who immediately, on a full or tumultuous gathering of people, had been captured, and brought him back ignominiously to the bucket. Nay, all idle bystanders were seized by the shoulders, and promptly hustled into line. One young fellow in a blouse made a most energetic resistance, shook off the gensdarmes who had collared him, and took to his heels. A brisk chase ensued, and the "authority" being longer in the legs and staunchier in the wind, the young rebel was caught, and right under a plaster statue of Liberty, which stands on the Boulevard, led him back to the scene of action, and soaked him from head to foot with a bucket of water—no agreeable act in late one foggy December morning. Altogether the scene from first to last was anything but devoid of significance and moral.

"HOME TRUTHS."

(From Chambers' Journal.)

A LATELY published duodecimo, under the title of "Home Truths for Home Peace, or 'Muddle' Defeated," imparts a number of useful hints on the subject of domestic life, and raises pretty soundly those young housewives who, starting in life novices, are prone to make females uncomfortable and everybody about them miserable. "Muddle" is the peculiar reproach in all its branches, and no kind of Muddle is so offensive to that which prevails in ill-conducted households.

Very incredible things, we are told, take place in the simply modest dwellings. The miseries of a brittle nature are found to break in a manner singularly supernatural. "Cups slip out of the maid's hands; and this, not when she has let them go, but whilst holding them as tight as ever she could hold." Glasses, &c., are constantly falling of their own accord; and of tables, although declared by competent judges to have been far removed from such a dangerous position, so that they have evidently been placed there for the purpose of dashing themselves into a thousand shivers. Other articles of fragile material, but less daring revolutions, are constantly in danger of disappearance, and assert their right to tender consideration by 'getting' such chips, cracks, and splinters in their composition, as would never venture to inflict. Nor are the harder and less sensitive portions of our household furniture, unscathed by the mischief of Muddle, which delights to make females uncomfortable and everybody about them miserable. "Muddle" is the peculiar reproach in all its branches, and no kind of Muddle is so offensive to that which prevails in ill-conducted households.

Very incredible things, we are told, take place in the simply modest dwellings. The miseries of a brittle nature are found to break in a manner singularly supernatural. "Cups slip out of the maid's hands; and this, not when she has let them go, but whilst holding them as tight as ever she could hold." Glasses, &c., are constantly falling of their own accord; and of tables, although declared by competent judges to have been far removed from such a dangerous position, so that they have evidently been placed there for the purpose of dashing themselves into a thousand shivers. Other articles of fragile materials, but less daring revolutions, are constantly in danger of disappearance, and assert their right to tender consideration by 'getting' such chips, cracks, and splinters in their composition, as would never venture to inflict. Nor are the harder and less sensitive portions of our household furniture

COLONIAL ROOMS,
454, CHARING-CROSS, EAST, LONDON
(Four doors from Trafalgar Square.)

THE COLONIAL ROOMS are intended to afford a place of rendezvous for parties who take an interest in any of the Colonial Dependencies of Great Britain. They will be continuation of the Australian Rooms established in 1839. The reviving importance of Colonial affairs demands a renewal of the accommodation afforded by this kind of Exchange-Room, and the prospect of still increasing activity in the furtherance of Emigration, in the promotion of Trade, and in the maintenance of Political Supremacy, has dictated the choice of the most central situation in the Metropolis,—the point of meeting for the great thoroughfares from the City to the West end, and the official quarter of Westminster.
At these Rooms information will be brought together from all parts of the Empire, by the intercourse of individuals, by Newspapers from the colony, by Books, Parliamentary Papers, Reports, Maps, &c. Every pains will be taken to keep this copious information in a state available for the readiest and most convenient use.
It is hoped that persons having relatives or property in the Colonies, visitors from the country, or Gentlemen interested in promoting the welfare of our dependencies, will find in these Rooms a means in conferring on affairs, and of co-operating in measures for the advantage of the Colonies.
Persons whose views are directed to Emigration will find complete facility in obtaining that general knowledge so essentially necessary to guide their judgment in selecting the Colony most suitable to their own objects and resources, not only through the information derivable from the books, papers, &c., constantly at hand, but also through the meeting with those who have resided in the Colonies, and can give the results of personal observation and practical experience.
To Government Regulations on which land is disposed of in the Colonies will always be found in these Rooms, in their original and most recent forms, together with the fullest information respecting the purchase or leasing of Colonial Lands in the possession of Public Companies or private individuals. Subscribers not resident in town will be furnished by letter with all the information on these points that they may specially require. Occasionally a circular will be issued to all the Subscribers, containing a digest of recent Colonial News, of Official or Commercial Intelligence, and of all such facts and particulars as bear upon the immediate interests of the Colonies.
The annual subscription to the Colonial Rooms is one pound. Those who wish to become Subscribers are requested to communicate with Messrs. Cavana and Gouldy, Emigration and Shipping Agents, No. 454, Charing Cross, East, London.

GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES.
The Largest and Best Assortment in the Colony.
Just Landed, ex Phœnician and Eliza Caroline.
THE Advertiser would particularly recommend the attention of the public to the above Extensive Assortment, and more particularly those who are in want of a Ready Good Timekeeper, for never has he had an opportunity of doing so with greater confidence than at present, the whole of the watches received by the above vessels having been carefully examined and regulated in positions before leaving the manufactory. Such a thing as nothing more is therefore necessary to insure their proper performance, than merely winding of them up.
Silver Patent Lever Watches, in £ s. d. double backed engine-turned cases, copped and jewelled, patent detached escapement maintaining power, and all the recent improvements .. 4 10 0
Silver Patent Lever Watches, in double backed engine-turned cases, highly finished 3-plate movements, jewelled in 10 holes, compensation balance bands to mark the seconds, with silver or enamelled dials, detached escapement maintaining power, and all the recent improvements 5 5 0
Gold Patent Lever Watches, in double backed engine-turned cases, highly finished 3-plate movements, jewelled in 10 holes, compensation, balance bands to mark the seconds, with gold and extra hard enamelled dials, detached escapement maintaining power, and all the recent improvements 10 12 6

Gold Horizontal Watches, jewelled in 4 holes, 3-plate movements, double backed engine-turned cases, set hands at back, with elegantly embossed gold dials, going barrels to continue the action while winding, and all the recent improvements 8 17 6
Every watch sold at this establishment is warranted for two years, and a written guarantee given, should the watch require fresh oil, or other attention within the period of warranty it will be done free of charge; after that time, it will be cleaned and adjusted on the payment of 5s. 6d. if of the patent lever construction, or 1s. if of the horizontal; and no further charge will be made for attention during the time exceeding two years.
The expense of repairing a watch which has been accidentally broken, for or one by another maker, may be known by enquiry at the time of its being left; the skill with which a watch is repaired and adjusted is of almost as much importance as its quality—the best watch cleaned by an unskilful workman, will not go well. Possibly it may be no exaggeration to say, that more watches are spoiled by being placed in the hands of inexperienced workmen than are worn out by the public, for the injury which a bad workman does is often of a kind that can never after be satisfactorily rectified.
